Taiwan, Venezuela, and the United Arab Emirates. These are just three of the 36 countries that are part of PJ Library’s international program. We have myriad statistics to back up our mission, but as always, it’s about stories — not just the ones we share but also the ones created to reflect different cultures. To make the stories even more accessible, many have been translated into English, Hebrew, Spanish, Portuguese, German, Russian, and Ukrainian.

Our hope is that families everywhere see PJ Library books both as mirrors and windows. We want families to see themselves in the stories, so the books feel relatable and relevant. But we also want them to see and learn something new about Jewish customs or traditions that are different than theirs.

PJ Library books are a time-tested way to make that happen. Through stories, children are learning that British Jews created fish and chips, and Moroccan Jews celebrate a separate holiday after Passover called Mimouna. There will always be room to learn something new about the Jewish experience and enhance our own Jewishness.

As Jews, it is a treat when we visit a new synagogue and pick up a siddur (prayer book), knowing that even if the songs sound different, we are still among our shared community. PJ Library offers a small taste of that same feeling, knowing that children everywhere are reading some of the same stories, just as Jews have shared the same ancient books for millennia. Here’s a look at some of our stories from around the world.

Donors at all levels have an impact around the world. You can support the PJ Library International Fund by making a gift online at pjlibrary.org/donate or contacting give@hgf.org.
Gina from Siberia
Written by Jane Bernstein and Charlotte Glynn
Illustrated by Anna Desnitskaya
Published by Animal Media Group

Many immigration stories take place long ago but not this one. Based on the true story of Gina, a wire-haired terrier whose family snuck her out of Siberia and into the US during the Cold War, this beautiful and thrilling tale follows Gina as her family travels by bus, train, car, plane, and minivan.

Shanghai Sukkah
Written by Heidi Smith Hyde
Illustrated by Jing Jing Tsong
Published by Kar-Ben Publishing

When Marcus’ family moves from Europe to China in the 1930s, he feels like a fish out of water. He doesn’t know any Jewish families like his. But when he makes a new friend, he’s able to build an unusual sukkah just in time for Sukkot — and that helps him feel more at home.

A Sweet Meeting on Mimouna Night
Written by Allison Ofanansky, illustrated by Rotem Teplow
Published by Groundwood Books

For Moroccan Jews, the end of Passover means it’s time for Mimouna! Miriam wants to help her mother make moufleta pancakes for their party, but they don’t have any flour. Their Muslim neighbors are happy to help and soon become friends.
