

TH B TT R-THAN-B S RIM

Written & Illustrated by Naomi Howland

Soon it will be Purim, and it's time for a little old lady to bake her better-than-best hamantaschen. Her pets are all too busy to help her with the baking, but chances are they'll have time to taste the results of her work. Sound familiar?

JEWISH CONCEPTS

Rosh Hashanah

The holiday of Rosh Hashanah (literally “Head of the Year”) is celebrated for the first two days of the Jewish month of Tishrei. Some Jews observe a one-day New Year. Rosh Hashanah offers a chance to reflect on the past year as well as to consider the one to come.

Many Jews celebrate Rosh Hashanah by attending worship services at synagogue and by sharing festive meals with family and friends. The holiday dinner is characterized by symbolic foods: apples and honey are eaten in hopes of a sweet New Year, while a round challah represents renewal and the cycle of life.

The last page of Happy Birthday, World has an illustration of tashlich, a traditional ceremony that takes place on the afternoon of the first day of Rosh Hashanah. It is customary to walk to a body of running water and toss breadcrumbs into the water, a symbolic discarding of our wrongdoing of the past year.

One of the most powerful moments during the Rosh Hashanah service is the blowing of the shofar, a ram's horn. The unique sound of the shofar is meant to awaken in us a sense of introspection and a desire to renew ourselves.

USING THIS BOOK AT HOME

Rosh Hashanah provides a splendid opportunity to begin new family traditions. Create prints of your children's hands and feet with paint or ink; these can be made into greeting cards and sent to family and friends for the holiday. You might also choose to include a family photograph with your personalized card. Keep a card so that you can compare the prints to ones you create in future years. On your copy, you might make notes about what your children are learning to do, favorite expressions they use, or special activities you've recently taken part in as a family. It is hard to imagine how much your children will have grown by this time next year; as time goes by, you'll appreciate a keepsake of these times!

Another tradition is that of creating a family tzedakah box in which your family can put aside money to be donated to worthy causes. Take an empty coffee can (any container without sharp edges will do) and wrap it in bright paper. Little hands can decorate the paper with markers, glue and buttons, or any available decorative items. When the can is full of coins, decide as a family where to send the money. As your children grow older they can participate in this decision-making in increasingly meaningful ways. Selecting a charity might be something you do as part of your Rosh Hashanah preparations each year.
